The 2025 Rob Fuller Luncheon: Investing in Minds, Impacting Futures

By Sigourney Orstad

It's that time of year again! As the school year winds down and students gear up for graduation, the Centralia-Chehalis Chamber of Commerce hosted its annual Rob Fuller Top 25 Luncheon.

The event honors the top 25 students from both Centralia High School and W.F. West High School. These 50 graduating seniors earned the highest GPAs at their respective schools, demonstrating exceptional commitment to their education.

The luncheon also recognized scholarship recipients who applied through local Chamber-affiliated funds, including 11 students awarded the Rob Fuller Scholarship. The scholarship honors the legacy of the late Rob Fuller, a respected Lewis County business owner, community leader, volunteer, and philanthropist.

Keynote speaker Hillary Hull—an agricultural teacher, FFA advisor, and Worksite Learning Coordinator based in Yelm—encouraged students to take pride in their achievements. She distributed stickers as a keepsake, encouraging recipients to collect stickers during meaningful milestones and display them on a water bottle as a visual reminder of their accomplishments.

W.F. West senior Mackenzie Dotson, a Rob Fuller Scholarship recipient, expressed her gratitude.

“I’m just really grateful to have won this award,” she said. “My college tuition is very expensive, so any little penny helps at this point and really takes the burden off my family.”

Dotson plans to attend George Fox University in Newberg, Oregon, and pursue a bachelor’s degree in nursing.

Another recipient, Connor Klov Dahl, shared what the scholarship means for his future.

“It means a lot to have won this award,” he said. “It takes a financial burden off my back to provide a better future for myself. It’s a big help—a big steppingstone into the future.”

Klov Dahl plans to attend Centralia College to earn his associate degree. He’s still undecided on his long-term path but looks forward to exploring his options.

This year also marked the debut of the PUD Commissioners Tradesman Scholarship. W.F. West senior Jaden Blanks, one of the first recipients, reflected on its impact.

“It feels pretty amazing, honestly,” said Blanks. “I just transferred to W.F. West last year, and getting these opportunities to actually do whatever I want in life and really succeed—it’s honestly amazing. And to be one of the first ones to win this award? That’s pretty cool, if you ask me.”

Blanks plans to attend Clover Park Technical College in Tacoma to study welding.

The students recognized at the Rob Fuller Luncheon have bright futures ahead. The Centralia-Chehalis Chamber of Commerce is proud to support them as they take their next steps and wishes all Lewis County graduates success in their post-graduation endeavors.

Standing up for small businesses in the wake of Olympia’s overreach

By Rep. Peter Abbarno

20th Legislative District

As your representative and a proud member of our vibrant Lewis County community, I’ve always believed that small businesses are the heartbeat of our local economy. From the corner café serving morning coffee to the family-owned hardware store that has supported generations, these enterprises are not only job creators but community builders.

That’s why I’m deeply concerned by the slate of tax increases and burdensome regulations passed during the 2025 legislative session in Olympia—legislation championed by the majority party that will make it harder for small businesses across Washington to survive, let alone thrive.

Let’s be clear: the last few years have not been easy for anyone. Our local business owners have weathered the COVID-19 pandemic, record inflation, supply chain disruptions, and labor shortages. Yet despite these challenges, many have continued to invest in our communities, hire local workers, and provide essential services with grit and resilience. They deserve our support, not more roadblocks from the state legislature.

Unfortunately, that’s exactly what they got this session.

Peter Abbarno

New and higher taxes

In a time when small businesses are struggling to stay afloat, the Democrat majority in Olympia passed new taxes and increased existing ones, including a new regressive tax on certain business services and an increase in B&O taxes for many industries. These changes hit small and mid-sized businesses hardest, especially those with narrow margins who can’t simply absorb the extra costs. At the same time, small business owners were taxed, while the majority exempted some of the largest and wealthiest corporations from the very same B&O tax.

More regulations, less flexibility

The regulatory burden has also grown significantly. From new environmental compliance mandates to stricter employment reporting requirements, the 2025 session was a regulatory onslaught. Many of these rules were crafted without input from the small business community and with little regard for their cost or practical impact. What might be manageable for a multinational corporation in Seattle can be crippling for a five-employee machine shop in Chehalis.

We need a balanced approach that protects workers and the environment without sacrificing the entrepreneurial spirit that drives our local economy. These new regulations do the opposite. They are layered, unclear, and expensive to implement.

A rural voice that must be heard

As a representative of a largely rural district, I find it deeply frustrating that voices from communities like ours are too often ignored in Olympia. Decisions made in the shadow of the Space Needle don’t always reflect the needs or values of places like Centralia and Chehalis. That disconnect was on full display this session.

I fought hard against these proposals, advocating for relief and support for our business owners through tax credits, regulatory reform, and investment in workforce development. Unfortunately, those efforts were consistently sidelined.

THE ROB FULLER LEGACY

Pacific Salmon's Journey (Northwest Salmon Smokehouse)

In waters cold off western shore, Where rivers meet the ocean's roar, Pacific Salmon start their quest, From mountain streams to ocean's breast. Five kinds swim this coastal tide: Chinook, the king, in power and pride, Coho, silver flashes bright, Sockeye red in spawning light, Pink with humps, in odd-year flow, Chum with teeth and undertow. Born in gravel, eggs lie still, In redds beneath the current's will. Alevin hatch with yolk-sack fed, Then fry emerge from riverbed. They linger long or hurry fast, Smolts turning silver as they pass— Out to sea, through estuaries wide, To grow in strength on ocean's tide. Years at sea, they journey far, Past kelp and orcas, under star. Then something stirs— an ancient call— They homeward swim through rapids tall. No map, no guide, yet back they come, Upstream to where their lives begun. Through dam and bear, they fight and climb, To spawn, then perish— marking time. Their bodies feed the stream anew, Bears and trees and insects too. A cycle drawn in fin and flame, Wild, enduring, never tame.

But our work is far from over. The path forward We must continue to raise our voices and demand that Olympia listen. Washington's regressive tax system ranks at the bottom nationally, and has just gotten more regressive. To fix Washington, Olympia must cut taxes and regulations on the businesses and individuals that can least afford the added burden, not increase them. I encourage every business owner, every chamber member, and every concerned citizen to reach out, get involved, and share how these policies affect you. When lawmakers hear directly from the people they serve, change becomes possible. In the months ahead, I will continue pushing for common-sense reforms prioritizing local businesses and working families, not bureaucratic expansion and tax increases. I'm committed to building a stronger, more resilient economy for Southwest Washington that puts Main Street first. Together, we can send a powerful message: small businesses are not Olympia's piggy bank. They are the foundation of our communities—and they deserve better.
