Alderson’s Awards West - Printwares: More Than 50 Years of Celebrating Community Success

By Cynthia Mudge
Chamber Executive Director

For more than five decades, Alderson’s Awards West - Printwares has helped celebrate victories, milestones, and achievements throughout Southwest Washington and beyond. From youth sports trophies and school uniforms to branded corporate merchandise and online fundraising storefronts, the Centralia business has continually evolved while remaining rooted in community service.

The company’s story began in the early 1970s when Ralph and Linda Peel opened Ralph’s Trophies at 604 N. Tower Avenue in Centralia. In 1981, the business was purchased by Pat and Sherry Swanson, who expanded its offerings and vision. By 1984, the company was renamed Awards West to better reflect its growing services, including in-house engraving.

A major turning point came in 1986 when Tom and Karen Alderson became partners with the Swansons. That same year, the owners partnered with the Voetbergs to build a larger facility after quickly outgrowing their original 1,200-square-foot storefront. In 1987, the business moved into its current 6,400-square-foot location, where it continues to operate today.

In 1995, the Swansons sold their share of the company to the Aldersons, leading to another evolution of the business and its name — Alderson’s Awards West - Printwares.

“Adding screen printing, apparel, and more products meant we were more than trophies,” explained Tom Alderson. “We didn’t want to become too narrowly defined.”

That philosophy has guided the company’s steady growth over the years. While trophies and awards remain part of the business, Alderson’s has expanded into custom apparel, team uniforms, branded drinkware, promotional products, embroidery, engraving, and corporate merchandise.

The company has also embraced technology to remain competitive in an increasingly online marketplace. Today, Alderson’s creates online storefronts for schools, sports teams, and businesses, helping organizations streamline fundraising and merchandise sales.

“We’ve always helped schools and parents raise funds for youth projects,” said

Alderson. “Modern technology simply makes the process easier for our customers.”

Online storefronts eliminate much of the paperwork traditionally associated with fundraising, reducing manual order forms, deposits, and inventory tracking while allowing organizations to focus on promoting their missions, products and raising funds.

Although the company is deeply connected to youth sports and schools, its reach extends far beyond local teams and tournaments. Alderson’s serves a broad corporate customer base throughout Lewis and Thurston counties, with additional business coming from Cowlitz, Pacific, and Grays Harbor counties. Many longtime business customers have continued working with Alderson’s even after relocating to branches in other states.

Their customer list has included recognizable names such as Ritchie Bros., Michaels Distribution Center, Fred Meyer, Braun Northwest, and even the Seattle Space Needle Corporation.

A significant part of the company’s success comes from keeping production local. Approximately 85 percent of its products are completed in-house at the Centralia facility.

“Some of what we provide is outsourced to our cooperatives, as it allows us to better serve our customers. “But the vast majority of what we provide is produced on our own factory floor”.

As one of the region’s enduring legacy businesses, Alderson’s Awards West & Printware represents more than longevity. The company has become woven into the fabric of the community — celebrating championships, honoring achievements, supporting fundraisers, and helping local businesses build their brands for more than 50 years.

June: Healthy Father’s and Communities

By Rep. Peter Abbarno
20th Legislative District

As we celebrate Men’s Health Month and Father’s Day this June, it is a good time to reflect on the important role health, family, and community play in building a strong local economy and a stronger future for Southwest Washington.

As a husband and father, small business owner, attorney, and state representative, I understand firsthand how easy it can be to put personal health on the back burner while balancing work, family responsibilities, and community involvement. Many fathers and business owners across Lewis County do the same thing every day.

Men’s Health Month serves as an important reminder that preventive care, mental health awareness, physical activity, and healthy lifestyles matter; not only for individuals, but for families, workplaces, and our broader community. Healthy employees are more productive. Healthy business owners are better able to grow their businesses and support their workers. Healthy parents and mentors are better able to invest time and energy into the next generation.

For many local businesses, especially small businesses, the health of the workforce directly impacts success. Whether it is construction, agriculture, healthcare, retail, or professional services, employers throughout our region understand the importance of reducing workplace injuries, encouraging wellness, and creating safe, healthy work environments. Businesses that invest in workplace safety and preventative healthcare often see improved morale, lower absenteeism, and stronger employee retention.

This conversation is especially important in rural communities like ours. Access to healthcare can sometimes be more limited in smaller towns and rural areas. That is why partnerships between healthcare providers, schools, employers, chambers of commerce, and community organizations are so valuable. When communities work together to promote healthy living, support mental health awareness, encourage outdoor recreation, and improve access to preventative care, everyone benefits.

I especially want to give a shout out to Julie Schaffley at Good Health Nutrition. Not only does her store have a wide variety of food and products to keep you healthy, but Julie never avoids me at Chamber events when I want to talk about a tincture or natural remedy. Visit her store on Harrison Ave. in Centralia or goodhealthnutrition.net.

Father’s Day also reminds us of the importance of mentorship and leadership. Fathers and father figures often teach lessons that extend far beyond the home: responsibility, accountability, work ethic, perseverance, and service to others. These values are also foundational to successful businesses and thriving communities.

Many of the business owners and community leaders who help make Lewis County special are also parents and grandparents. They coach little league teams, volunteer at community events, support local nonprofits, and mentor young professionals entering

Finding Our Way Home

By Cynthia Mudge

Chamber Executive Director

Finding meaningful work is something many people spend years pursuing, and sometimes the path to a fulfilling career appears in unexpected ways. For Amber Taylor, that path led her back home — and helping others find a home of their own.

Taylor pursued a science degree at Linfield University while playing softball. She then transferred to Oregon State University and was deeply involved in her biochemistry laboratory studies. Initially planning to further her degree and dedicate her career to scientific research. She then decided to move back home to Chehalis and realized that another passion was calling to her more. More than six and a half years ago, Taylor decided to follow that passion and build a career in real estate.

“I loved the lab work part of science, but real estate introduces me to a lot of people and fulfills that creative problem solving that I enjoy,” said Taylor.

That combination of relationship-building and problem-solving has become the foundation of her success. While many people view real estate simply as buying and selling houses, Taylor sees something much deeper — an opportunity to help families build stability, create financial security, and establish a legacy for future generations.

For Taylor, four key elements make the profession especially rewarding: creating new connections, building lasting friendships, solving challenges creatively, and maintaining a flexible schedule that allows quality time with family.

As a single mother, family has always remained central to her priorities. The flexibility of real estate allows her to attend school functions, be present for important milestones, and spend meaningful time with her daughter while still building a successful career.

That balance between professional ambition and personal commitment has helped shape Taylor’s approach to serving clients. She understands that purchasing a home is one of the biggest financial and emotional decisions a person can make. Buyers are not simply searching for square footage or curb appeal — they are looking for a place where life will happen.

“Ultimately, when buying a home most people are looking for privacy, good schools, and safety,” Taylor explained. “Lewis County offers all of this.”

Indeed, Lewis County has experienced tremendous growth in recent years. Since 2019, the county’s population has grown by nearly 14 percent, increasing from just over 79,000 residents to nearly 90,000 today. As more people discover the quality of life available in Southwest Washington, the demand for housing and knowledgeable local realtors continues to grow.

Taylor believes strong communication and collaboration are essential in helping clients navigate that competitive market. Good realtors do far more than unlock doors and arrange showings. Whether purchasing a home or a commercial property, they help buyers understand financing options, guide sellers through marketing strategies, and work through complicated negotiations with professionalism and care.

One area where Taylor particularly excels is relationship-building within the industry itself.

“I always want to congratulate a realtor on their sales,” she said. “It is part of building a good team around you so that you can support each other.”

That positive outlook has helped Taylor develop a reputation for professionalism and encouragement among both clients and fellow agents.

Taylor works with eXp Realty as part of the Paula Burrows Team, where mentorship and collaboration play an important role in daily business. Taylor credits Paula Burrows with providing guidance, encouragement, and support not only for her, but for the entire team.

Burrows is also known throughout the community for her generosity and commitment to helping youth — values that align closely with Taylor’s own outlook on life and business.

For Taylor, success in real estate is not measured solely in sales numbers. It is found in the relationships built along the way, the families helped through major life transitions, and the opportunity to make a lasting difference in the community she calls home.

In many ways, Amber Taylor’s journey into real estate has become more than a career path. It has become a way of helping others find their own way home.

the workforce. Organizations like the Centralia-Chehalis Chamber of Commerce play a critical role in fostering those relationships and strengthening our sense of community.

Our chamber businesses do more than provide jobs and services. They sponsor youth athletics, support scholarships, donate to local causes, and invest in the quality of life that makes Southwest Washington such a wonderful place to raise a family. That community-minded spirit is one of the reasons our region continues to grow and succeed even during challenging economic times.

If you are interested in supporting youth soccer players in Centralia, Chehalis, and surrounding areas, consider supporting Twin City Union F.C. and visit twincityunion.sportngin.com.

June is also a great time to enjoy the many opportunities our region offers for healthy living and family activities. Southwest Washington provides incredible access to parks, trails, lakes, and outdoor recreation. Whether it is taking a walk along the Chehalis River, hiking local trails, fishing, biking, or simply spending time outdoors with family, these activities help improve both physical and mental health while strengthening family connections.

At the same time, we should continue encouraging conversations around mental health. Many men still hesitate to seek help for stress, anxiety, depression, or other mental health challenges. Breaking down those stigmas and encouraging open conversations can save lives and strengthen families. Employers, coworkers, friends, and family members all play an important role in supporting one another.

If you or someone you know is struggling with mental health challenges or addiction, be sure to visit Cascade Community Healthcare at CascadeCommunityHealthcare.org.

As your state representative, I remain committed to supporting policies that strengthen families, improve access to healthcare, promote economic growth, and support our local businesses and workforce. Supporting healthy families and strong local businesses go hand in hand.

This June, as we celebrate fathers and recognize Men's Health Month, I encourage everyone to take a little extra time to focus on health, family, and community. Schedule that annual check-up. Spend time with loved ones. Support local businesses. Get outdoors. Check in on friends and coworkers. Small steps can make a big difference.

The strength of Southwest Washington has always been its people; the hardworking men and women, parents, business owners, employees, and volunteers who care deeply about their communities and invest in the future. Together, we can continue building stronger families, stronger businesses, and a stronger Washington.
